

Framing Plasma TVs

Many homes have a focal point in the family room, den, or living room—usually a television. Today, more and more families are making that focal point a high-definition plasma television. If you have a plasma TV or are thinking about getting one, consider having it wall mounted and framed like a piece of art.

Plasma TVs have to be framed according to where they are hanging, what type of wall they are hanging on, and their weight. Your TV may already be imbedded in a wall or mounted on one. Whatever is the case, we have a framing solution for you. Frames can be made that match your furniture and other objects in the room.

Once you frame the television, take it one step further and order software to transform the blank screen into a mirror or even a work of art. When your television is not on, images create an illusion that it is a painting. Many software companies have customized galleries or single images available for this. Another option is to use a canvas with art that lowers over the TV screen when it is not in use.

Framing your plasma TV adds a new dimension to your room and lends a sophisticated touch to your decor. Matching other furniture and objects in the room keeps a smooth, even look that would meet the standards of any interior designer. ■
